General Cadorna's latest report informs a extending the Italian offensive to other portions of the front. Austria has utterly failed to frustrate the development of the Italian plan of campaign. That plan proposed to direct the main Italian offensive eastwards across the Isonzo in the gap between the mountains and the head of the Adriatic. The Austrians hoped to frustrate its development by breaking through to the south from the Trentino upon the railway communications across the Venetian plain which supply Italy's main forces upon the Isonzo. In Champagne a small enemy grenace attack on our advanced post to the west of the Butte de Mesnil was easily repulsed.

On the left bank of the Meuse, the Germans, during the evening and in the course of the night increased their offensive actions against our positions from the Bois of Avocourt as far as the east of Hill 304. A series of very violent local attacks, preceded by intense bombardments, and accompanied by jets of burning liquid, was directed by them against the principal salient of our lines between the Bois of Avocourt and Hill 304. All their attempts were withered by our fire, which inflicted upon them heavy losses.

To the east of Hill 304, after several fruitless assaults, the enemy succeeded in taking possession of a fortified work in our first line, the garrison of which had literally been buried by the bombardment.

Towards four o'clock in the morning a brilliant counter-strack by our troops rendered its once more masters of the work.

On the right bank the bombardment was very violent in the sectors to the north of Sonville and Tovaunes, and notably in the region of Chenois. There was no infantry action.

Bramley (Furnishing Trade Association), in moving that the Government be requested to take steps to regulate the prices of foodstuffs and fuel in order to prevent the exploitation of the working classes by the control of merchant shipping, the commandeering of home-grown crops, the control of foreign supplies, and fixing of coal prices, contended that the work of the Nasy in clearing the seas of enemy trade, and protecting our tended that the work of the Navy in clearing the seas of enemy trade, and protecting our own shores, had been exploited by ship-owning, mining, and monopolist trading companies generally to the disadvantage of the consumers. The necessities of the nation had, he said, been taken advantage of to raise freighte and to increase the prices of all food-stuffs and coal to an excessive extent, resulting in enormous profits to the owners. He denied that the Government had done all that was possible for the protection of the people, and the prevention of a gross scandal and a crime against the community.

Mr. J. Cross, J.P. (Amalgamated Weavers), in seconding, declared that so long as the protected themselves against increased cost of living should take steps to press for such advance in wages as was necessary to maintain the pre-war standard of life and physical efficiency.

Mr. Bellamy (Railwaymen's Union) seconded. Several delegates supported the motion, which was agreed to.

On the main question, Mr. R. Smillie, J.P., President of the Miners' Federation of Great Britain, pointed out that, while the Government had regulated the price of coal at the pit bank, they had done nothing to prevent the exploitation of the consumers by the producers, middlemen, and shipowners. The miners had been loyal to the needs of the miners had been loyal to the needs of the profits of owners. The miners were not going to submit to any further reduction at the pit bank, because their wages were governed by that standard, but they did not want to profit by the war, and did not believe in passing meriely pious resolutions with no driving power behind them. If the Government could not, see their way to reduce the workers, then it was for the workers to make sure by their own efforts of their ability to live through the higher prices. (Cheets.)

The main assolution, as amended, was then agreed to unanimously.

A motion calling for an increase of old age pensions during the period of high prices by not less than firty per cant. was carried without opposition.

Thus we have gradually come to know more of William Shakespeare than we know, perhaps, of any of his literary contemporaries, with the exception of Francis Bacon. Mr. Justice Madden's book, "The Biary of Master William Silence," is the final word on English field-sports in the Elizabethan age, and we rejoice to see sp well equipped a student of Shakespeare adding to the literature of the Tercentenary a volume on Shakespeare's relations with "his fellows"—that is to say, his "companions, associates, conrades," in the sense of the word noted in the "New English Dictionary" as "now rare."

Mr. Justice Madden has unearthed all that can be known of Shakespeare's connection with Edmund. Spenser, Ben Jonestion son, and Christopher Marlowe, with the players, the "University pens," and, finally, with his family and friends. This book should, we think, give the coup de grace to the favourite Baconian theory that the William Shakespeare who came up from Stratford in 1586, left London about the William Shakespeare who came ap from Stratford in 1586, left London about 1611, and spent his few remaining years in ease in his native town, was an illigrate clown absolutely incapable of writing the least of the dramas which are attributed to his authorship. It is true that the judge's acceptance of the identification of Shakespeare with the "Action" of Spenser's culogy is open to question. Fleay assigns the allusion to Drayton, and some have thought that Marlowe was intended; but we admit that the arguments for "Action's" being Shakespeare are fairly convincing. The inference from Spenser's sonnet to Gabriel Harvey is particularly happy, as to the probability of a friendship between the two great Elizabethan poets. There is a shrewd reference to our own times at page 45, where we read of Spenser's being questioned as to the state of Ireland—"a question," says Mr. Justice Madden, "which has been repeated throughout the centuries to succeeding generations of Irish officials on their visits to London," The suggession that a passage of four lines in "Richard II." represents Shakespeare's recollection of Spenser's defence of the policy of his patron and friend, Arthur Lord Grey, of Wilton, is not such as the state of the policy of his patron and friend, Arthur Lord Grey, of Wilton, is not such as the state of the policy of his patron and friend, Arthur Lord Grey, of Wilton, is not such as the state of the policy of his patron and friend, Arthur Lord Grey, of Wilton, is not such as the such as the state of Wilton, is not such as the such a friend, Arthur I ford Grey, of Wilton, is put with convincing lucidity.

The jealousy manifested by the "University pens" towards the players—to which is to be attributed the well-known. The jealousy manifested by the "University pens" towards the players—to which is to be attributed the well-known attack on Shakespeare in Green's "Groatsworth of Wit"—receives full attention. Its cause is to be looked for in "the extreme shifts" to which the former were often reduced, so that we need not-wonder "that no trace can be found of cordial relations between Shakespeare and the University pens, such as existed throughout his life with his fellow players." With the latter, however, Shakespeare abode on terms of intimate companionship. Augustine Phillips, who, like his fellow shareholder in the Globe Theatre, died in affluent circumatances, left in his will "to my fellowe William Shakespeare a thirty shilling peece in gould." To the pious care of John Heming and Henry Condell we owe the priceless gift of the First Folio, published, as they tell us. "according to the true originall copies"—doubtiess the acting editions preserved in the Globe Theatre. These players, with the great tragic actor, Richard Burbage, were the recipients of mourning rings under Shakespeare's will, and two of them, as executors of Augustine Phillips, received each a sallver bowl of the value of five pounds. Mr. Justice Madden has much to tell us as to the attitude of modern editors towards the once discredited Folio. To quote Sir Walter Raleigh (the modern bearer of that title), "for twenty of the plays it is our sole anthority; for most of the remainder it is the best authority that we shall ever know."

Of Shakespeare's indebtedness to Marlowe we have full recognition. As Swinburne says, "he first, and he alone, guided Shakespeare into the right way of work," Sad and misspent as was the life of the only "Master of Shakespeare" it was at least not so black as we had been led to believe; and the summing up of the evidence in the chapter devoted to Christopher Marlowe enables the reader to see

DISSOLUTION OF DUBLIN PARTNERSHIP.

In the Chancery Division, Dublin, yesterday, before Mr. Justice Barton, a case of Colgan v. Young appeared in the list. The action was for dissolution of the partnership entered into believen John Martin Colgan and three other plaintiffs, with the defendant Wm. Young, in respect of the boot business carried on at 101 and 102 Taibot street. The plaintiffs and citizened dissolution of the partnership, and accounts of the defendant's trading after the plaintiffs had as they alleged, been excluded from the reveal the plaintiffs claim, and asked that he should be appointed receiver and manager over the partnership business.

Statement by Mr. A. E. Camey (managing direction) at the Virol general meeting:

"There is an erroneous impression in the minds of some people that an advertised article must be dearer by the cost of the advertisement. This would obviously be the case if the sales were not increased by the advertising—the cost of production of any article being largely governed by the amount sold. We might have advanced the price of Virol to the public, or we could have reduced our expenditure, but either of these courses would probably have had the effect of restricting sales and so further increasing the percentage of our. Influenced by the progressive nature of our business, we decided to extend our efforts, and even to increase our advertising expenditure, with the result that the very much larger turnover, even at a lower rate of profit, has more than covered our increased charges, while not one penny of the extra costs has failen upon the public."
